NOW SHOWING

Curated by Tyler Waxman

Saturday July 8 from 7 to 9 pm

Jonathon Hornedo's Landscapes are a group of paintings of sculptures in landscapes arranged in a still-life kind of way. They were made in late 2010 to 2011 and are forty-five inches wide and sixty-three inches high and made with oil paint on kozo paper adhered to handmade Canvas Panels with archival PVA. The sculptural arrangements are lit and staged in a loose, easy manner. Painted with care and style on a life-sized scale, the Landscapes emphasize what they feel like to look at.

Now showing together for the first time are six of twelve paintings. These paintings are stylized descriptions of real sculptural events posing in an unfamiliar but possible world. They will be installed at PØST, a non-profit artist-run gallery in Downtown Los Angeles. When Tyler Waxman, the curator of this show, asked Hornedo how the paintings are hung Hornedo said you just use two long drywall screws. Since they are all the same size, he went on to say, they'll be a snap to install and deinstall, which is great because this show is only a one night thing for PØST's Kamikazi series.

The new episode of Rated PG, a radio project by Anthony Bodlović and Jonathon Hornedo, will also be debuting. In their ninth episode called "Legalize This", Anthony and Jonathon hit the road for an unknown length of time to evade law enforcement for stealing tapes from the KPFK archive. Although charmed by the American landscape, the pressure mounts when it becomes unclear to Hornedo whether he'll make it back to Los Angeles in time for his big solo show.

Edition Popcorn by Sara Chao.
